E MAGAZINE

Editorial

Welcome to the 2023 edition of the English Department's e-magazine at Hazi A. K. Khan College, Hariharpara, Murshidabad. This year's edition encapsulates a diverse array of literary and scholarly outputs from our students, reflecting a rich mosaics of thoughts shaped by their unique experiences and insights. From the lyrical stanzas of "The Seasons of Bengal" by Sakil Reja, which vividly bring to life our region's distinct seasons, to the compelling essay by Dowaz Hossain on "Environmental Consciousness for a Better Tomorrow," our magazine offers a platform for voices that inspire and provoke thought.

The review of Jafar Panahi's "Offside," presented by Shahina Mumtaz, offers a deep dive into the cultural and gender narratives that resonate well beyond the borders of Iran, reflecting our commitment to understanding global cinema's impact on societal norms. Moreover, the stories and poems like "Dreams Big and Small" and "The Fisherman's Resolve" explore the universal themes of ambition and resilience, echoing the spirit that we cultivate in our academic endeavours.

This edition also proudly highlights the dynamic activities of our department over the past year. The introduction of new add-on courses like "Gender & Literature" and "Spoken English" signifies our ongoing efforts to enhance our curriculum and provide students with skills relevant to both their personal growth and professional demands. The international seminar on "Diaspora Literature: Exclamation for the Crises of Space and Identity" and the cultural programme "Euphoria" are prime examples of how we integrate cultural appreciation and scholarly discourse, fostering a well-rounded educational environment.

As we put together this magazine, we are reminded of the strength and resilience of our academic community, especially in these challenging times. Each article, poem, and story is a beacon of the intellectual rigour and creative passion that define our department. We hope that this publication not only entertains and informs but also inspires our readers as much as it has inspired us in its creation.

Thank you for engaging with our e-magazine. May it spark new ideas, foster hope, and encourage a deeper appreciation for the power of words and the stories we share.

The Seasons of Bengal

Sakil Reja
Department of English
2nd Semester

In Bengal, the skies tell tales,
Spring whispers with fragrant gales.
Flame of the forest burns bright,
Painting villages in vermillion light.

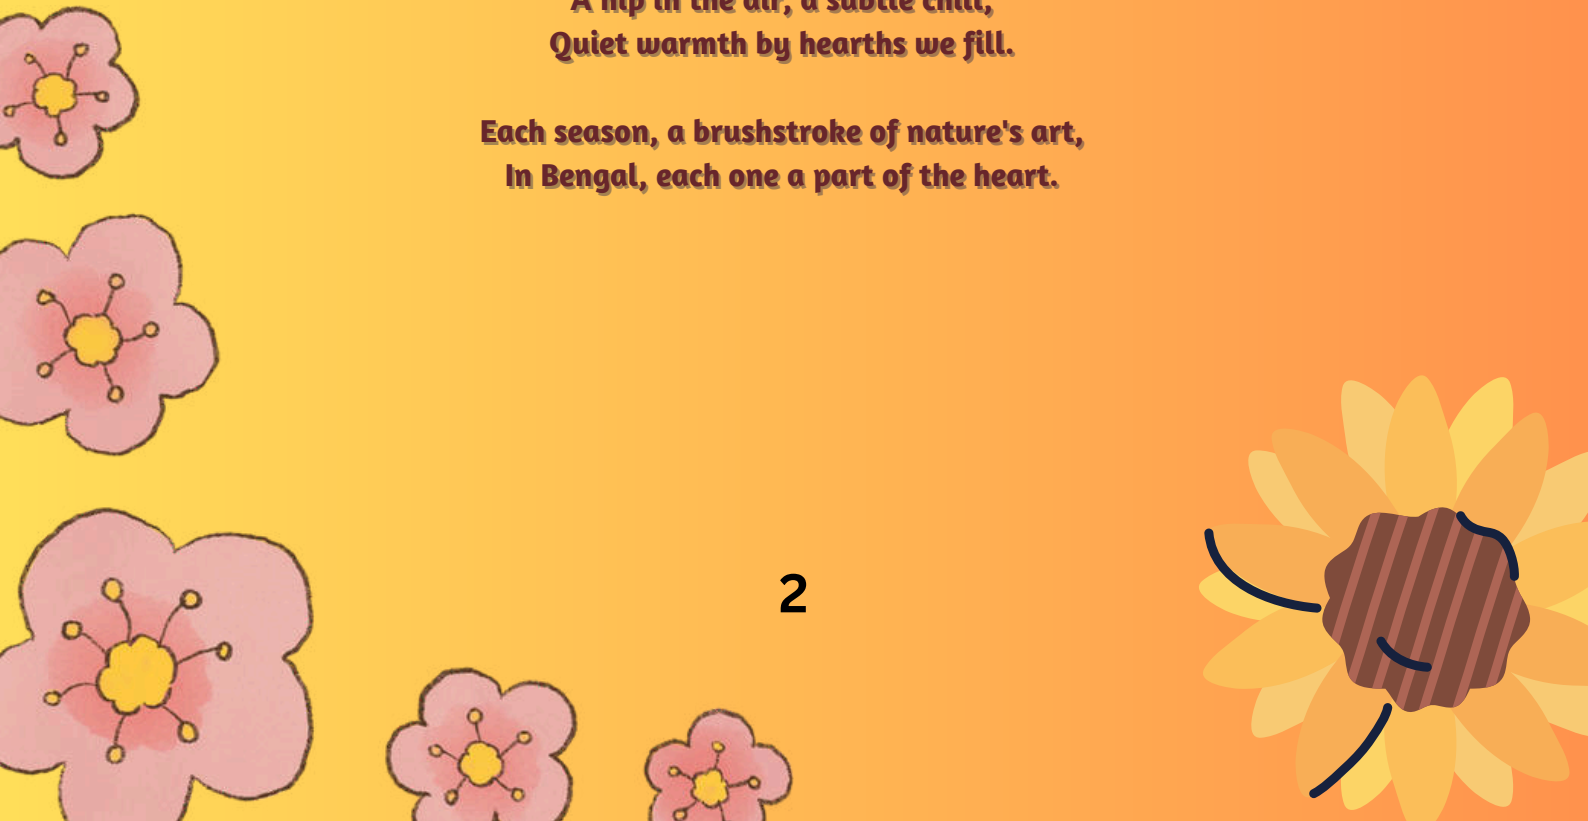

Then comes the summer's scorching hand,
Mango showers bless the thirsty land.
Palms sway under a relentless sun,
Children run, seeking rivers of fun.

Monsoon serenades with rhythmic rain,
Puddles mirror a dancing terrain.
Green engulfs every waking dream,
Rivers gush, alive and supreme.

Autumn arrives with festive cries,
Drums beat under cooling skies.
Fields of white and skies of blue,
Kash flowers sway, in breezes they woo.

Winter wraps in a gentle fog,
Dewdrops glisten on morning jog.
A nip in the air, a subtle chill,
Quiet warmth by hearths we fill.

Each season, a brushstroke of nature's art,
In Bengal, each one a part of the heart.

Environmental Consciousness for a Better Tomorrow

Dowaz Hossain
Department of English
6th Semester

Environmental consciousness is more than a trendy catchphrase; it is an essential mindset that requires active participation from individuals, communities, and nations globally. At its core, environmental consciousness promotes awareness of the impact our actions have on the planet and fosters behaviors aimed at sustainable living. This mindset is the first step toward a better tomorrow, one where ecological balance and human prosperity are not at odds but are integrated seamlessly.

The foundation of environmental consciousness lies in education. Informing people about the fragility of our ecosystems and the seriousness of issues like climate change, deforestation, pollution, and biodiversity loss is crucial. Knowledge empowers individuals to make informed decisions about their consumption patterns, energy use, and lifestyle choices. Schools and educational campaigns can play a pivotal role in embedding this awareness from an early age, ensuring it becomes second nature to think and act green.

Adopting sustainable practices is the next pivotal step. This includes reducing waste through recycling and composting, conserving water, and cutting down on energy consumption. Simple actions such as turning off lights when not in use, using public transportation, or cycling instead of driving can significantly reduce one's carbon footprint. Beyond individual actions, supporting or initiating community-driven environmental projects—like urban gardens, recycling programs, or local clean-ups—can catalyze broader societal shifts.

Technological innovation also holds the key to advancing environmental consciousness. Renewable energy technologies, such as solar and wind power, are becoming more efficient and affordable, making sustainable energy accessible to more people. Innovations in biodegradable materials and electric vehicles are also paving the way for less pollutive alternatives to dominate market spaces previously ruled by environmentally damaging options.

Governmental policy and corporate responsibility are equally vital in this journey. Laws and regulations that enforce environmental protection, conservation initiatives, and pollution control are fundamental to safeguard natural resources. Similarly, corporations that adopt green policies not only contribute positively to the environment but also set standards within their industries, encouraging peers to follow suit.

However, environmental consciousness extends beyond pragmatic actions to a deeper philosophical shift. It involves recognizing the intrinsic value of nature and understanding our integral part within it, not as dominators or exploiters but as stewards and caretakers. This respect for nature can inspire a more profound commitment to environmental ethics, influencing policies, education, and community initiatives that prioritize ecological health and resilience.

For a better tomorrow, we need a cultural transformation that embeds environmental consciousness into the fabric of society. We must move from seeing the earth as a resource to be used to a home that must be cared for with respect and consideration. As we face increasingly severe climate crises, the need for this shift becomes more urgent. By fostering an environment-first approach today, we are paving the way for a sustainable, flourishing future. This is not just an investment in the environment but in the survival and thriving of future generations.

Film Review: Offside

Sahina Mumtaz

Department of English

6th Semester

We recently watched Jafar Panahi's film "Offside" from 2006, organized by our teacher, Bahadur Biswas. This Iranian movie gives us a look into how sports, culture, and gender issues mix in Iran.

The story happens during a big soccer game between Iran and Bahrain. It's supposed to be exciting, but the movie focuses more on a group of young women trying to watch the game live, even though they are not allowed to. The title "Offside" cleverly points to both a soccer rule and how these women are unfairly kept out of the stadium.

Panahi films everything with a simple camera that makes it feel real and immediate. The women, dressed like boys to get past security, are caught and watched over by young soldiers. What follows is both funny and sad, showing how silly and unfair their situation is.

The film makes all its characters feel real and human. The women are smart and really want to watch the game. The soldiers are young and don't really want to enforce the rules. Everyone is stuck in bigger issues of what society expects.

"Offside" uses the soccer game, something that usually brings people together, to show how divided people can be. We hear the game in the background, reminding us what the women are missing. The film ends on a hopeful note, suggesting things might get better.

Watching "Offside," I realized how powerful movies can be in talking about important issues like equality. It made us think and talk about big topics in a new way. This movie is more than just entertainment; it's a lesson on life and fighting for what's right. Panahi's film is not only fun to watch but also makes you think and gives you hope.

Dreams Big and Small

Al Sahariar Islam

Every morning, people wake up with dreams,
Some want to heal others, bustling through hospital streams.
Some wish to write poems under a tree,
Creating verses that feel free.

A builder takes pride in the walls he's made,
A dancer leaps gracefully, her passion displayed.
Each person follows a path that's their own,
Chasing dreams under the stars, into the unknown.

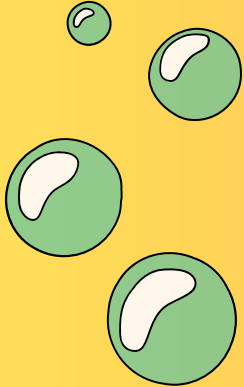

A teacher shapes young minds with care,
A farmer plants seeds, hoping for a fair share.
Dreams are like seeds, starting small but growing tall,
In a world where dreamers dare to call.

A scientist explores what hasn't been seen,
Finding secrets where few have been.
An artist mixes colors bright and new,
Creating scenes that draw you through.

Life is full of different dreams and goals,
Woven together, they play their roles.
In the future's picture, everyone's dreams are keys,
Helping build a world as they please.

So let's keep dreaming, each in our way,
For dreams build our world, day by day.

The Fisherman's Resolve

Tuhina Khatun
Department of English

In a small village by the sea, there lived an old fisherman named Elias. His life had been tough, just like the rough seas he sailed on every day. Elias was old and his boat, "The Siren's Call," was worn out, but it was his faithful companion on many fishing trips.

Every morning, Elias would sail out before sunrise, hoping to catch enough fish to sell. Some days, he came back with lots of fish; on other days, he caught almost nothing. Life was hard, and it didn't help that his wife, Amina, had passed away and their son, Rashid, had moved to the city, leaving Elias to face the challenges alone.

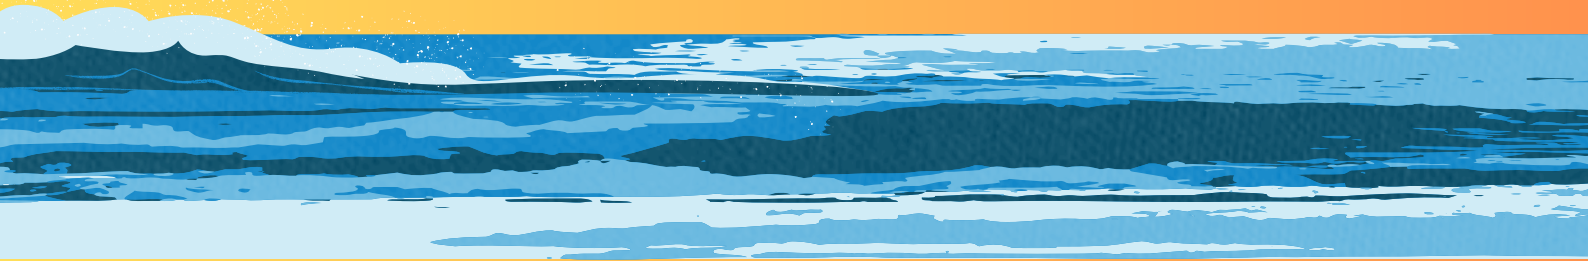

One stormy day, Elias got a phone call that shook him deeply. Rashid was very sick in the hospital and needed expensive treatment. Elias was low on money because he hadn't caught many fish lately.

Driven by desperation, Elias decided to take a big risk. He sailed out during a terrible storm, chasing a legend of a huge school of fish that appeared only during such weather. It was very dangerous, but he was willing to do anything to help his son.

After hours of struggling with the storm and nearly giving up, Elias's net suddenly filled with fish. He barely made it back to shore with his heavy load. The village came together to help him, and he sold the fish for enough money to pay for Rashid's treatment.

A few days later, Elias sat beside Rashid's hospital bed in the city. He realised that all his life's hardships had taught him to be strong and to never lose hope. He was just a simple fisherman, but his love for his son was as deep as the ocean. Facing the storm to help Rashid showed Elias that no matter how hard life got, he could always find a way through.

Elias learned that life, like the sea, can be unpredictable and tough, but also generous. Through his toughest challenge, he found his greatest strength.

DIASPORA LITERATURE: EXCLAMATION FOR THE CRISES OF SPACE AND IDENTITY

About the Seminar

Literature is a medium of expression. It is an expression of the experiences of life: experiences of various kinds—pleasing or painful; happy or hurting; appealing or disappointing. When these experiences result from expatriation, a different dimension comes to be interwoven. Though globalisation often gestures homely, a feeling of "homelessness" often haunts an expatriate. And there emerges the notion of diaspora. A major theme of diasporic writing is the occupation of feasible space for both living and loving. Such a thing remains an outsider both to the new culture and to that of the homeland. Another significant theme is dual identity, the conflict between a person's ethnic legacy and the individual "new" identity. The ambivalent desire for the universal synchronisation and the ethnic affiliation makes a crisis inevitable.

Globalisation has paved the way for the expansion of diaspora literature. It is chiefly about images of adaptation of the writer's subconscious memories in the host culture. There is emotional crisis of self and nationality; there is a discovery of one's self as the centre of human existence. Diaspora literature reflects culture, tradition, social values and even history through the depiction of life in native and host country. The writers of this genre re-live in their memories to perceive the present. The ultimate upshot is an exclamation for the crisis of space and identity.
